Thursday, June 24: West Side Story

This musical about New York City gangs was directed by choreographer Jerome Robbins and Sound of Music director Robert Wise. The Sharks and the Jets dance their battles on the streets in this modernized take on Romeo and Juliet. The songs by Leonard Bernstein, with lyrics by Stephen Sondheim, are some of the best of the era.

Thursday, July 15: Breakfast at Tiffany's

A favorite of dorm-room posters and Halloween costumes, Blake Edwards's comedy about girl-about-town Holly Golightly helped turn Audrey Hepburn into a fashion icon, thanks to her long black gown, elegant up-do, and signature black sunglasses. (She nails a trench coat too.) Adapted from a Truman Capote novel, it's one of the most stylish films of the 20th century.

Thursday, August 5: It Happened One Night

This fast-talking rom-com directed by Frank Capra invented the genre known as the "screwball comedy" way back when movies with sound were still called "talkies." In one of the first road movies ever, Clark Gable and Claudette Colbert embodied a smart relationship that was surprisingly forward-thinking for its time.

Saturday, August 21: Casablanca

This WWII classic, directed by Michael Curtiz, pairs beauty Ingrid Bergman with tough guy Humphrey Bogart for a story of lovers ripped apart by war and reunited in a far flung Moroccan piano bar—of all the gin joints in the world.

Saturday, September 4: Meet Me in St. Louis

The nostalgic musical Meet Me in St. Louis might contain Judy Garland's best screen performance. She stars as Esther Smith, one of four sisters reluctant to uproot their Midwestern lives and move to New York. Her performance of "Have Yourself a Merry Little Christmas" made the song a holiday standard, and she met her future husband, director Vincente Minelli, on the set.

A literary review depicts the book as, "This beautiful book is one of the very few picture books about a gender non-conforming child. Yet it feels like a celebration of all children who want to do things differently than the parental figures in their lives—and a love letter to the grownups who deeply understand them." This free story walk will feature pages of the book throughout the park pathway and include interactive questions and activities for all families to engage.
